Dear Mr. Weisberg.

I hope your phlebitis is very much better. What a damnable occurrance.

"POST MORTEM" is undoubtably the most tremendous, individually-produced indictment of any corrupt government in the history of the world! To date I have studied my way only to page 376 and the personal interview with Dr. Carrico.

Since there is what I believe to be a mistake in the second complete paragraph on p. 376 I will bring it to your attention. (I haven't noticed any others.). Should not the sentence "Carrico considers it unlikely." read "Carrico considers it likely."?

As a graduate student at the U. of Sussex in England in 1969, obtaining an M.A. in International Relations and not paying taxes to support U.S. geopolitical ambitions in S.E. Asia, among other places, one of my Readers was Peter Calvocoressi. Peter was on England's legal staff at Nuremberg, has written on world politics, world (recent) history, and several years ago became Editor-in-Chief of Penguin Books. He's a good man - hated the bombing of Dresden and fought against the British imperial stance during the Suez crisis of 56.

I would be glad to explore, by letter, the possibility of Penguin Books publishing "POST MORTEM". Please do not take this as interference. Your works need the widest possible distribution and Peter Calvocoressi might - just might - be able to help - if not at Penguin possibly elsewhere in England. It's a thought!

With best regards to you and to Mrs. Weisberg.,

Sincerely,
